THE PALL, OAHU.

[Written for the ADVERTISER-GAZETTE.] 'Tween splintered peaks on Oahu's lovely isle, A mighty gorg : by ancient earth-quakes rent

In twain divides the steep stupendous Where purple mists on soaring peaks, are blent With azure of the vaulted dome.

The trade winds from the north-Pale clouds, like fretted flakes foam Against the deep embrasured face, And pinnacles of fern-clad steep,

Where lustrous fronds of maile interlace And clasp the grateful crags in loving warm embrace.

Come, stand we here between the glittering towers, And gaze abroad from the imperious height, Where sun-dogs riding on the slanting showers

Break 'gainst the peaks in shimmer ing waves of light. Below our feet a flower-gemmed

Long waving slopes of grassy And waving fields of yellow grain, While high above tumultuous flocks Of wild birds hover o'er the seas, Breaking upon the beach with thundering shocks, And tossing sil'vry spray athwart the heated rocks.

In the dim distance rich'y freighted White shadows cast upon the azure deep; Along the shore the pliant sea grass whips 'Round coral columns, and the pale weeds creep Around the crevices and cells, And labyrinths beneath the waves. Within the dim grim ocean dells The tangled dulse its branches Strange fishes dart among the

And darkened crannies, where the pearl shell clings, And through the mystic chambers weird sea-music rings. The day is waning; all the landscape The coming eve its lengthened shadows flings; Our thoughts go back to by-past days of yore, When wild-eyed warriors of the rival kings, Thirsting for blood, poured up the And fought each other hand to

And loud above the shricking gale Was heard the dying moan and

Of brave defenders of the land, In wild despair arising to the sky, As fast before Hawaii's triumphant king they fly.

Below the precipice lie human bones, Of warriors hurled from the giddy height: Bleaching and bare among the mossy stones

Since that long-dreaded and eventful night When old Kamehameha rose Triumphant, king of all the land. Vanquished and beaten all our foes, Unheeded every cry and groan; How shall it fare us when we In God's fierce light? Can we for aught atone? What answer can we make before the great White Throne? CHARLES H. EWART.

Miss Mitchell's Unique Trip.

New York, March 29 -George H. Danels general passenger agent of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, has received word from Miss Bess Mitchell, who has undertaken to make a railway trip of over 10,000 miles attired in ordinary house costume, without putting foot on the ground. She passed through San Francisco this morn ing, en route to El Paso and Los Angeles. She continues: "I have an invitation from the Southern Pacific Railway to visit Santa Barbara, with the assurance that I will not have to put my foot on the ground, but my pathway will be made one of roses, and I may gather oranges from the car window.
